

Congratulations!

You're the lucky recipient of the best present ever: A whole year full of books! Some-one special thought you'd love this eclectic collection of suspenseful novels, a dozen terrific mysteries delivered directly to your door. Whether your box of literary goodies has already arrived or is still en route, here are a few clues about each title. (You can read more about these books at basbleu.com.)

January: A contemporary whodunit set at a destination wedding that will keep you guessing until the very end.

February: A deliciously creepy tale that both embodies and subverts the tropes of Gothic literature.

March: This contemporary novel centers around a retirement-home resident whose "innocent" snooping makes her the target of some very dangerous people.

April: This thrilling, darkly shocking mystery set during the dawn of apartheid transports readers to 1950s South Africa.

May: A searing psychological thriller about a pair of kidnapped sisters...and the riveting tale spun by the one who comes home.

June: A modern literary classic, this hardboiled noir set in 1940s Los Angeles introduces an unforgettable sleuth.

July: First published in 1897, this skillfully crafted, slyly amusing whodunit with amateur sleuth Amelia Butterworth is still a delight.

August: This psychological thriller from Norway begins by revealing that its protagonist has committed a crime, but the "why" is the true mystery.

September: This contemporary novel unfolds on a Louisiana plantation-turned-tourist attraction, where a migrant worker's murder unearths secrets from the past.

October: A chilling thriller about a fierce mother who clashes with a zealous cult in an unpredictable story of love, deception, and survival.

November: A 1940s noir classic, about a wealthy businessman driven to obsession when his new bride vanishes with his fortune.

December: A collection of eleven short stories set during the holiday season and abounding with mystery, murder, and mayhem.

Happy reading!
